"My goal was to create an enchanting, optimal-healing environment with objects, textures, and colors that have soothing qualities and evoke happy associations," says Huh. "The view of the playground and garden outside the window inspired the Apple Tree of Happiness fabric from Marimekko, which established the room's color palette. Despite the long hours working on this project, everyone was always smiling, laughing, and enjoying each other's company. I truly felt that I was part of a family and that I have made lifelong friends."

"I chose an aquatic theme because it's both whimsical and evokes the peacefulness of the sea," says principal Kerry Delrose, who papered one wall in an Osborne & Little fish pattern and employed colorful furniture and accessories donated by Poppin. "I'm proud to know that kids will have a cheerful and comfortable room to help lift their spirits every single day."

"My challenge was to create functional spaces that are youthful enough for a home focused on children," explains Colding, who redecorated seven spaces in the house, including bathroom and laundry rooms. "To complement the cutting-edge bathroom fixtures from Duravit, I added fun wallpapers to bring in color, such as the amazing Enyo pattern from Trove. I've dealt with a lot of illness in my own family, so I understand how important your surroundings can be at such a stressful time, and how a positive environment can facilitate healing."
